U.S. Plans Anti-Spy Dismissals

Foreign Staff In Soviet Bloc Posts to Be Cut

By Joel Brinkley New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — The State Department plans to reduce the number of foreign nationals working in American embassies in Soviet bloc countries because many of them are believed to be spies, goverument officials said.

Meanwhile, Secretary of State George P. Shultz told a senator Monday that he endorsed in principle an advisory panel's recommendation that dozens of new embassies and consulates be built around whe world to discourage terrorist

In a letter to Senator Republican

The reduction of foreign employees and the construction program are among actions recommended in a report by an Advisory Panel on Overseas Security that Mr. Shultz set up in July 1984. The panel was headed by Admiral Bobby R. Inman, former deputy direcor of central intelligence.

A 50-page supplement detailing espionage problems in U.S. embassies in Soviet bloc countries will not be made public, but government officials and members of Congress described its contents on Monday. According to Senator Patrick J. Leaby, a Democrat of Vermont, who as deputy chairman of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence has been briefed on the problem, the report said that so many resians, including known intelli-soice agents, are employed at the U.S. Embassy in Moscow that the Members of Congress and State Department officials have long debated the wisdom of employing So-viet citizens. The State Department has defended the practice on the ground that Soviet citizens have no access to American secrets.

But, according to an intelligence official, the advisory panel found that Soviet citizens are "so perva-sive throughout the embassy" that by watching and reading available materials they can gather sensitive

Reagan Considering Embargo On Lebanon, Airport Closure

By David Hoffman Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON — President Ronald Reagan, considering ways to increase pressure for the release of 40 Americans held captive in Lebanon, may attempt to close Beirut International Airport or establish a United States embargo against Lebanon, the White House announced Tuesday.

After the president met Tuesday afternoon with his foreign policy advisers, the White spokesman, Larry Speakes, said that Mr. Reagan would first rely on diplomatic initiatives involving Lebanon's neighbors. The president will let diplomacy run its full course before taking further steps," Mr. Speakes said, "but is prepared to take whatever action is necessary to bring an end to international terrorism" that is used as a means "for testing the United States and its allies."

But the White House spokesman, reading from a written statement, said that "if diplomatic efforts do not bear fruit" in the next few days, the Reagan administration will turn to a series of other options that were presented to Mr. Reagan on Tuesday morning. These would include closing the Beirut airport and undertaking action "affecting the flow of goods and services to Beirut and Leba-

Democrats Cancel Midterm Meeting

WASHINGTON (AP) - The Democratic National Committee decided Tuesday to cancel a party midterm convention in 1986, taking a step back from one of the changes it made in the 1970s to open the party to the opinions of the rank and file.

The chairman of the committee, Paul G. Kirk Jr., pushed through the decision, saying that it would produce savings well in excess of $1 million.
"The party needs these funds more for midterm election victories than for a midterm conference," Mr. Kirk said at the opening session of the day summer meeting.

The change was approved overwhelmingly on a voice vote, but three was opposition. "We've always been an open party," said Sue Rockne of Zumbrota, Minnesota, "Don't send a message that we are closing down."

The congress president, Oliver Tambo, announced the policy change at the organization's Zambian headquarters after the conference, which was held at a secret location in southern Africa, ended. About 250 delegates attended the session. Mr. Tambo said that five Indian, white and mixed-race persons had been included for the first time in the group's top body, the executive committee. Formerly open to blacks only, it was expanded from 22 v

Emerging for Water

In a challenge to long-stand-ing practice, a free market is developing for water in the Far West, where most water has been sold by federal and state agencies at fixed rates kept low by public subsidies. The New York Times reports that a California irrigation district has hired an engi-neering company to help it save millions of gallons a year now lost through evaporation, seepage and rimoff; the water thus saved will be sold to the highest

San Diego is negotiating to buy water from a group of Denver entrepreneurs who seek to dam a tributary of the Colorado River. Such efforts are being pushed by both politicians and environmentalists. They complain that the present system en-courages waste by pricing water too cheaply.

Radicals Holding Some of Hostages in Baalbeck, U.S. Thinks

By David B. Ottaway and George C. Wilson

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — U.S. intelligence officials believe that a group of hostages from TWA Flight 847 is being held in a Shiite military barracks in the eastern Lebanese town of Baalbeck, an area under Syrian control, government sources have disclosed. If this is true, the officials say, it would further diminish prospects for the prompt release of the 40 Americans from the airliner that was hijacked on June 14.

The base in Baalbeck is a headquarters of the most radical Shiite elements, who seem least likely to agree to an unconditional release of the hostages.

The Baalbeck barracks has long been at the top of a list of potential targets for U.S. military retaliation against the militant Shittes—a fact known to the Shittes, since the barracks has been attacked previously racks has been attacked previously by Israeli and French bombers. So the presence of these Americans could make military retaliation unattractive to the U.S.

There were conflicting reports Monday about the identities of the Americans — at least six of them, officials said — who are believed to be held in Baalbeck. One possibility is that four U.S. military men who were aboard Flight 847 are among those being kept away from the main group of hostages, the officials said.

There are signs that the radical Party of God, who have a head- Shiite religious leader, warned last

If the radical Shifte captors of the separately held group of TWA passengers adopt a similarly hard tine now, then even the release of a good number of the 735 Lebanese prisoners still being held by Israel may not be enough to persuade them to accept an Israeli commitment to complete release of their captives after the Americans are

This leaves open the possibility that over a period of weeks the Israelis could continue the process begun Monday — of releasing Lebanese prisoners in batches of a few dozen until all have been freed. But such a continued Israeli re-

U.S. and Israeli leaders have the sisted that there is no competition between the release of the fast 21 Lebanese prisoners in braid and the fate of the 40 American has tages. But eventually the United States and Israel may have to deride how far they are willing to go unilaterally to satisfy the Shifts orincipal demand.

Claims for Indian Plane May Be the Costliest Ever

Air-India jetliner off the Irish coast could result in the largest property insurance claim in aviation history. insurance experts said.

Insurance on the Boeing 747 aircraft and equipment amounted to about $100 million, said Terry Ti-tron, former chairman of the Lloyd's of London Aviation Underwriters Association, on Monday. In addition, liability claims by dependents and estates of the 329 passengers and crew members are expected to increase that amount substantially.

A major part of the insurance on the plane was underwritten or rein-sured through Lloyd's, the world's biggest insurance market, according to insurance executives. The primary insurer was said to be the government-owned General Insurance Corp. of India.

Peter O'Grady, president of the Aviation Office, said. "The lead company or syndicate will handle all the claims negotiations." refer-ring to Lloyd's, "and the rest of the market will follow." Mr. Titron told Reuters in Lon-

Elsewhere, however, Dylan's gift for characterization in a single hi for offhand aphorisms and for open-ended images, has resurfaced.

Amid its galloping percussion and wailing guitar, "When the Night Comes Falling From the Sky" tosses off lines like "From the Irreplace where my letters to you are burning" or "It was on the north-ern border of Texas where I crossed the line." "Tight Connection to My Heart" sums itself up with a terse "Never could learn to hold you, love / And call you mine." After its first impression, "Em-from the same structural premises. Glass may achieve it. He is working with Doris Lessing on an opera based on her "The Making of the Representative of Planet 8." It seems safe to assume that we, as Glass's great-uncle Al Jolson used to say, "ain't heard nothin' yet!"

Neither the singers nor the sing-ing counts for much in "Akhna-ten," but they count for everything in the Royal Opera's new production by Jean-Louis Martinoty of Richard Strauss's "Ariadne auf Naxos," borrowed from Paris's Opera-Comique.

The inventive production is annoyingly gimmicky, but the singing Jessye Norman in the title role Kathleen Battle as Zerbinetta (3 belated but auspicious Covent Garden debut) and Ann Murray as the composer, splendidly supported by the Royal Opera's new principal conductor, Jeffrey Tate, provides a glorious and thoroughly enjoyable example of what is most disastrously missing in "Akhnaten."

Some of those magnificent men in their flying machines were Thais.

In 1912, a mere eight years after American aviation pioneers carried out the first powered flight in their 'heavier than air' machines, three Thai army officers travelled abroad to a French flying school. They learned not only how to fly aircraft but also how to build them. In quick succession the Kingdom bought airplanes, established an airport and trained new pilots.

Starting as a mail carrier, the airline quickly grew and soon a passenger service was available. Then in a major reorganisation just 25 years ago, Thai International came into being.

Thai's pioneering spirit, its attitude towards service and the importance it places on the training and skill of its pilots, has led to the airline's development as one of the world's major carriers.

Today, Thai's route network has grown to include over 40 cities in 30 countries across four continents.

And servicing these destinations is an ever-expanding fleet of magnificent 747Bs and wide-bodied A300s.

So, fly smooth as silk on Thai. The airline that's still enchanted with the wonders of flight.

Farcical, but Not Funny

Americans who grow oranges and Europeans who extrude spaghetti would be comic if it were not symptomatic of a deep disease. The European Community gives special preference to Mediterranean growers at the cost of California, so now America claps a special duty on pasta from Europe. As usual, there is a lot to be said for both sides.

Europe's aim of helping its poorer members on the Mediterranean rim is not exactly ignoble. It is hard to have much sympathy with California when relative living standards and job openings are compared. And this sort of discrimination has respectable antecedents in the accepted rules of trade. America has long participated in the Generalized System of Preferences, which favors a wide range of goods from the developing world over the products of the rich.

On the other hand, it has been found in GATT - the ultimate arbiter of good and bad in world trade practice - that America has been unfairly injured by the citrus fruit preference. Unfortunately, Europe has shown scant willingness to negotiate or make compensation. So the Europeans who produce good pasta, and the Americans who like to eat it, find themselves innocent hostages in a war to which they are not a party.

Oranges, lemons and pasta, in themselves, pose minor problems that any set of governments could solve if the basic good will existed. It is inconceivable that Washington would have embarked on the perilous path of reprisals if all that was at stake was part of

The trade war now warming up between California's foreign market. And there are other ways than rigging the fruit market for Europe to help the Mediterranean.

But the Reagan administration today is faced by a gale of demands for protection across a wide range of industries (textiles and steel are in the fore) and 70 percent of Americans believe that imports are killing iobs. So Washington was in a weak position to repel pressure by the citrus growers. The European Community, in turn, faces a determined American attack on the agricultusal policy that was basic to its inauguration. And both sides face fierce competition from Japan and the industrializing countries. In these circumstances it is hardly surprising that reactions to individual events should be out of all proportion to their importance. Unfortunately, as Virgil pointed out, the descent into hell is deceptively easy. We are not all that many steps away from the infer-nal conditions of the 1930s, when trade barriers and competitive devaluations bred depression, intense xenophobia and war.

The descent cannot be stopped simply by the decisions of the trade experts who administer the import barriers and export subsidies, because they can only react - often unwisely - to economic conditions. We need policy changes that fundamentally remove the economic ills underlying trade warfare -- overvaluation of the dollar and undervaluation of the yen, weak domestic demand outside the United States, visible and invisible barriers to trade with Japan.

Cleaning the Defense Mess

For America's defense contractors, the best deodorant is competition. For lack of it, they have slid en masse into a stench of fraud and deceit. An army of accountants and auditors and a festoon of regulations have merely offered the excuse to add excessive overhead charges without securing simple honesty, much less efficiency or quality.

Read the latest charge-sheet from the Defense Department's inspector-general. Nine of the 10 largest Pentagon contractors, and 45 of the largest 100, are under criminal investigation. McDonnell Douglas and Rockwell are being investigated for alleged misstatements of cost; General Dynamics for subcontractor kickbacks, product substitution, security lapses, defective pricing, cost duplication and false claims; Lockheed for wrong labor charges: Boeing for misstating labor and materiel costs; General Electric for false claims, defective pricing and product substitution; United Technologies for subcontractor kick-backs, bribery and defective pricing; Raytheon for labor mischarging and product substi-tution; Litton for bribery and kickbacks, false claims and bid-rigging; Ford for defective pricing and falsifying records; Texas Instruments for product substitution; and Northrop for false progress payments.

Much of the trouble implies a more basic malady - bad management. Without the goad of competition, contractors have fallen short of even their own standards of efficiency. The number of hours a contractor estimates a job should require, divided by the hours actually taken, is a telling index of efficiency. In competitive industries it is close to 95 percent. But according to data obtained by the air force and reported in The National Journal, General Dynamics is only 58 percent efficient in building the F-16 fighter; Rockwell builds the B-1B bomber at 34 percent efficiency, and Hughes Aircraft makes the Maverick missile at an appalling 21 percent. Efficiency is far higher where procurement is competitive: Raytheon builds the Sidewinder missile, a contract it shares with Ford Aerospace, at 78 percent.

Congress is keen to improve military procurement. In the House, 133 members have now joined the military reform caucus. It has ideal instrument in an amendment framed by Representatives Denny Smith of Oregon and Mel Levine of California. They would require the secretary of defense to state in advance for all new weapons how he will provide for competitive procurement. They would require at least two sources for every weapon, unless that can be shown to cause exceptional cost or delay.

Even if the permitted maximum of 50 percent of the weapons budget is waivered through this loophole, that would raise the competitively let contracts from 6 percent to 50. Competition would make contractors reform themselves with a minimum of regulation. If in addition the Pentagon could learn not to overdesign weapons, and Congress not to let parochial interests determine votes on national security, there would be fewer $659 ashtrays and many more weapons of high quality and affordable price.

Europe's Environmental Paralysis

WASHINGTON — Last January I left the polarized, uncertain world of American environmentalism to study what I thought might be the more calm and effective cleanup programs of Europe. I returned to the United States persuaded that European environmental problems are not just more serious than America's, but also less likely to be solved.

At least in West Germany, where I spent most of my time, public concern has reached American levels and is still climbing. But turning this emotion into effective remedies turns out to be even more difficult there than in the United States, for three reasons: Few measures disturb the status quo more than effective environmental reforms, and European societies have become rigid. Most environmental problems have no respect for national borders, and there are too many borders in Europe for easy control. The frag-mentation of political power between countries gives the most recalcitrant the veto power over change.

By U.S. standards, European countries do little scholarly analysis of environmental problems, and they give less weight to those analyses that are done. That makes it easier for politicians to avoid problems.

As West Germany's Greens party suggests, anyone who tries to insert basic change into a political system as wedded to the status quo as Europe's is almost forced to challenge it on a broad front, both polemically and intellectually. And basic change will be required for Europe to achieve anything like American levels of en-vironmental protection.

The new environmental consciousness in West Germany is linked to problems that makes America's look small by comparison. Germany's population density is more than seven times that of the continental United States. More than 10 percent of the land is covered by cities or roads. There are only 120 areas of 36 square miles (93 square kilometers) or more that are not divided by a road.

No wolves or bears remain in Germany; nature protection often means This is the first of two articles.

The concentrations of people and industry show up in pollution levels. Only a few short river stretches high in the Alps are not polluted. Though sulfur emissions in West Germany are only half the U.S. level on a per

Since Roman times, Germany has been famous for its forests. Despite ed land - 29 percent - than any other member of the European Community. Nearly every acre of German woods is cultivated and watched over by professional foresters.

So "Waldsterben," or "dying for-ests," is a term the Germans have discovered painfully in recent years. Samples from all the woods in West Germany show that in 1983, 34 percent of the forest area had been damaged, and in 1984, half had been. No one can yet scientifically explain this trend. But the accepted judgment among scientists and the public is that air pollution is the culprit.

Waldsterben has made air pollution's effect on human health an uneasy subject. "First the forest dies. and then people," goes a popular slo-gan. A common children's disease known as "pseudo-croup," unknown in the United States, is generally blamed on air pollution.

And the Germans have more than air pollution to worry about. Twothirds of the nation's drinking water comes from wells drilled into underground aquifers. The purity of that water is in danger. When rain falls on the ground, it can be contaminated by flowing over built-up areas before it percolates into the ground. In many parts of Europe, farm overfertilization has led detailed information. West Germany to high nitrate concentrations in caused by abandoned hazardouswaste sites. This is magnified both by the dense population and the results of war damage. In some cases muni-tions, including nerve gas, were buried and forgotten after the war. One knowledgeable official says

German groundwater in some regions may need to be left alone for a half century until it purifies itself. Germans also speak of "soil pollution" — an idea completely undis-cussed in the United States. Soil pollution stands to some extent for groundwater pollution or damage to plants. But it also expresses a lear that the ecological cycles in the soil by which dead matter is broken down

West Germany two years ago also became the first country to elect representatives of an "ecological" party — the Greens — to its national legislature. Yet demands for effective anti-pollution action will confront two problems. Such programs are tremendously difficult to make work, as has been

In Drawing a Line Against Terrorism, Beware Nasty Surprises

By Philip Geyelin

W ASHINGTON — The Reagan adminis-tration has been pointing with pride to progress in El Salvador: more democracy, less violence, a shrinking insurgency. Lieutenant Commander Albert A. Schaufelberger 3d, the first American serviceman to die in El Salvador, would have read the same evidence with alarm. The commander, who was killed in 1983, would have been shocked by the brutal slaying last week of four U.S. marines and nine civilians in a sidewalk café in San Salvador. But he would not have been surprised. He would have seen it as a logical, tactical turn to urban war-fare against Americans in a guerrilla war when U.S. support is turning the tide against the insurgency in the countryside.

We know this not as a voice from the grave but from an extraordinary interview with The New York Times, a few days before Commander Schaufelberger was murdered on the streets of San Salvador. "They haven't targeted Americans because things are going so well," he told Lydia Chavez. But "if President Reagan is successful" in bolstering the government with U.S. aid, the rebels "are going to get nasty."
Trained in counterinsurgency, Commander Schaufelberger had no illusions about the nature of the struggle - or of the enemy. He knew this week to rally some sort of concerted interthe difference between nastiness for a particular purpose and "senseless terrorism" White House way of connecting last week's killings in San Salvador with the bombing of the airport in Frankfurt and the Beirut hostagetaking from the hijacked TWA jet. It all added up to "further evidence" that "the war which terrorists are waging is not only directed against the United States [but] against all civilized society," the White House said.

The trouble with talking about "terrorist" problems in such epic, indiscriminate terms is that it leads to talk about solutions in the same simplistic way. Consider last week's presidential statement: "This cannot continue," it said, without defining "this." "We must act," the statement went on, adding: "Our limits have been reached." Asked what that meant, Larry Speakes, the White House spokesman, said: "It means that we are now drawing the line."

What that line-drawing apparently means for now is more military help for the Salvadoran government. Meantime, Vice President George military force and to understand there is a Bush will take advantage of his trip to Europe potential for loss of life of some of our fighting national counterterrorist program. Afterward, he will set up a U.S. government-wide task force to help the president decide what to do. You would think that the Reagan administration had not been witness for four and a half years to a steady increase in terrorism, to the war in Lebanon, to an alarming spate of terror-ist attacks against NATO installations (more than 80 in the last year). You might even suspect that the administration is wracked by internal differences - and you would be right, if the public record means anything. Secretary of State George Shultz tells us,

"Experience has taught us over the years that one of the best deterrents to terrorism is the certainty that swift and sure measures will be taken against those who engage in it." Experience has taught us no such thing: Terrorism is on the rise; there is no record of "swift and sure" retaliation and therefore no evidence that retaliation deters.

Mr. Shuitz wants us to be willing to use military force and to "understand there is a men and ... of some innocent people." Yellow president recently said that the killing of innocent people would itself be a terrorist act. And Defense Secretary Caspar Weinberger has said publicly that "simply unloading a large bombing attack on some group you think may have done it [is] not going to prevent it in the future."
In a comprehensive documentary by the CBS television network, serious students of the problem opened up a new set of implications for the United States if retaliation or pre-emptive strikes against terrorists become a part of policy. William Webster, director of the Feder al Bureau of Investigation, said that any reari-sals that wound up "killing women and chil-dren" could provoke "suicide-type" attacks in the United States, Robert Kupperman of the Georgetown Center for Strategic and Integrational Studies said the "infrastructure" (de rorist attacks is already in place in America.

Perhaps Mr. Bush's task force will examine some of the seemingly endless new surprises that might be in store now that the limits of U.S. patience have been reached. If the administration is "drawing the line," the least it could do is tell us what it thinks is on the other side

An Attack on 'India Itself'

June 23 will go down as a black day in India's history. It was a deliberate attack not just on Air-India but on India itself, by unknown enemies of India. We do not wish to speculate on the identity of these enemies. We cannot afford to rush to conclusions. The stakes are too high. We have to be cautious. It is our duty.

- The Times of India (Bombay). The country must not allow anger to dominate its response. Nor should any individuals or groups seek private revenge.

-- The Indian Express (Bombay). India has still not expiated the blood lust of last November [when thousands of people were killed in anti-Sikh riots after the assassination of Prime Minister Indira Gandhil. It is incumbent on the authorities to preserve future stability by ensuring that there is no recurrence of such savagery. Nothing is to be gained - and much lost - by visiting the crimes of a guilty few on the innocent many.

1910: Spain Rebukes the Vatican

MADRID - The strained state of relations between the Vatican and the Spanish Cabinet was brought about by the Royal decrees recently issued. These allowed dissenting sects to place on the outside of their places of worship certain religious emblems indicating their character. Up to now the Catholic Church, being the recognized State religion, has alone enjoyed this privilege. As news of these decrees reached Rome, the Cardinal Secretary of State entered a decided protest against them. This protest Señor José Canalejas, the Premier, rethe decrees was an act of domestic government and that to admit the right of protest on the part of the Vatican would be equivalent to conceding to the Pope the right to interfere in the internal affairs of the country.

For a Cease-Fire on Trade Probably the worst thing that could happen to the world's trading system would be an outbreak of protectionism in America and the Common Market directed against Japan. That possibility may have to be faced shortly. From America come alarmingly clear signals that, without specific and substantial moves by the Japanese, the Reagan administration will find it impossible to hold the tide of protectionist legislation building up in Congress. The word "retaliation" is being freely uttered on both sides of the Atlantic.

There is no doubt a strong element of saberrattling here, but the evidence of tempers at their breaking-point is unmistakable. [Yasuhiro] Nakasone, the Japanese prime minister, will visit Europe in the middle of next month. [He] may surprise us by producing proposals that are both effective and tangible, and it would be rash to act before then. Retaliation against Japanese exports would have profound consequences for world trade, something not to be taken lightly.

Kennedy: A New Line, The Same Old Politics

By David S. Broder

WASHINGTON — The timing was accidental. But when Senator Edward M. Kennedy played bost to President Reagan on Monday at a glittering fund-raiser for the John F. Kennedy Library, more than one message was being sent.

Top state leaders of the Democratic Party, in town for the meet-ing of the Democratic National Committee, were reminded that Mr. Kennedy wants very much to be part of the choice of Mr. Reagan's successor

It is not the first time Mr. Kennedy has dropped such hints. Last March he told the Boston Globe that "I'd like to be president some day," and that he no longer felt inhibited by the family concerns that he said sidelined him in 1984.

In March, he began what was seen as an effort to reposition him-self and the Democratic Party, with a speech at Hofstra University in Hempstead, New York. He warned that Democrats would continue to lose national elections if they remained "content with fighting a rearguard action to save the policies of the past."

The man who challenged President Jimmy Carter from the left in an unsuccessful 1980 bid for the Democratic presidential nomination was reported, as The Washing-ton Post said, to be "moving his party and his political image to-ward the center."

There is nothing subtle about the effort. Last winter, he was photo-graphed in a smiling handshake with the Reverend Jerry Falwell, the Moral Majority leader, when both appeared at a convention of religious broadcasters.

Last week, when I went to his office for an interview, I was shown a framed enlargement of a letter of praise he received last year for his concern about the men and women of the armed services. It was signed by Barry Goldwater.

But for all the image-making there is no evidence of a radical change in Ted Kennedy. His heart and his head are where they always have been — at the left of the American political spectrum. When the nonpartisan National Journal published its ratings of members of Congress early this month, Mr. Kennedy was ranked the most liberal of all senators on combined economic, social and foreign-policy roll-call votes in the last Congress.

He is off to a good start in his title defense. In his Hofstra speech, Mr. Kennedy said Democrats must show "the courage to discard" outdated programs. When the Senate was debating the budget in May, he voted to discard only two. On 24 other floor amendments, he voted to maintain or increase spending. At Hofstra, Mr. Kennedy said,

"We cannot and should not depend on higher tax revenues to roll in and redeem every costly pro-gram." But the rejected Democrat-ic budget resolution he helped shape would have raised taxes $51 billion (mainly on corporations, he points out) to maintain higher levels of domestic spending.
He also warned Democrats against the "special interest" label that was so damaging to Walter F. Mondale in 1984.

But when the defense spending bill was up in the Senate early this month, it was Mr. Kennedy who offered an amendment to restore wage requirements for military construction projects — a perennial issue of special interest to the AFL-CIO building-trades unions. The point is not that Mr. Kennedy is hypocritical but that, for all the rhetoric, his heart is where it always has been. Listen to him for an hour and it is evident what stirs him: racism in South Africa and what he sees as the retreat on civil rights at home, famine abroad and hunger in America, unilateral U.S. military intervention in Central America, the need for nuclear arms control health care for all.

My strong sense is that Mr. Kennedy is not moving - that if he is ever to be president, the country will have to come to him.

That seems unlikely today. But Mr. Kennedy is only 53, the same age Ronald Reagan was in 1964 when he made his famous televised plea for the lost cause of Barry Goldwater's election. By 1980, the country's politics had shifted enough to put Mr. Reagan in the mainstream, and he benefited.

It may be that Mr. Kennedy's guest of honor Monday was really his role model. I find that possibility more plausible, and attractive, than the new-image alternative.

The Washington Post.

A 'Legal' U.S. Invasion of Nicaragua?

LONDON — Rhetoric or not? We probably won't know until the day it happens whether Ronald Reagan is serious about invading Nicaragna. But the talk is alarming, not just because it exaggerates Nicaragua's strategic importance but because it appears oblivious to the basic understandings of international law. But what is international law? And must it be obeyed? No less a figure than Dean Acheson stated at the time of the U.S. quarantine of Cuba in 1962: "I must conclude that the pro-priety of the Cuban quarantine is not a legal issue. The power, position and prestige of the United States has been challenged by another state; and the law simply does not deal with such questions of ultimate power - power that comes close to the sources of sovereignty.... The survival of states is not a matter of law." But what about the Charter of the United Nations, which abjures armed attack on another state unless it is in self-defense? It is not so simple, say the critics. They argue that interna-tional constitutions, like national ones, are not self-interpreting. No-tions such as "armed attack," "self-defense" and "intervention" are no more self-explanatory than "cruel and unusual punishment," "inter-state commerce" or "due process."

To interpret international law requires sophisticated judgment. Nevertheless, certain things stand out that are difficult for the president of a major democracy to put aside. Every nation recognizes and observes some elements of international law, ranging from the Law of the Sea to diplomatic immunity. All nations feel the pressure to find legal justifications for their behavior. As Richard Gardner, professor of law and international organization at Columbia University, writes in the journal Freedom at Issue: "The UN charter cannot be treated as pieces of India rubber to be stretched one way and then another in the light of the short-term political necessities of each simution. There has to be some continuity in our day-to-day interpretation. If we bend the principles to fit one case, we must be willing to live with the new configuration."

In the eyes of international law, Mr. Reagan does not have much to stand on.

By what measure then could a U.S. invasion of Nicaragua be justified? Would it be self-defense? Clearly there is no direct threat of Nicaragua invading the United States. Interna-tional law before the UN Charter recognized the right of anticipatory self-defense, when the "necessity of that self-defense is instant, over-whelming or leaving no choice of means and no moment of delibera-means and no moment of deliberation." But even this bold interpretation badly fits the Nicaraguan case.

A more telling justification of the use of self-defense would be for the United States to claim that it was defending El Salvador from the threat posed by Nicaragua's gun-runring to rehel groups extend to the ning to rebel groups opposed to the established government. John Stuart Mill provided a useful line of reasoning in an essay in 1848: "The doctrine of nonintervention, to be a legitimate principle of morality, must be accepted by all governments. The despots must consent to be bound by it as dealt with effectively when Andreas

Papandreou finally chooses to talk to well as the free states. Unless they do the profession of it by free combies comes but to this miserable issue: that the wrong side may help the wrong but the right must not help the right. Intervention to enforce nonintervention is always rightful, always moral, if not always prudent." Perhaps, then, there is a case for

Mr. Reagan. Yet even here is a catch. Would a U.S. invasion be "prudent" when the Nicaraguan supply of to the rebels in El Salvador has a samicantly slowed down in the last few years and when these arms play such a small role in the rebels' armory?

Another well-recognized interna-tional principle is military assistance upon request. Could Mr. Resgan use this? On this question the UN Charter is silent, though traditional law has long recognized the right of invi-tation by a beleaguered nation. But the West has made a practice of giving aid only to an internationally recognized government unless it has been overthrown by an outside invasion. In contrast, the Soviet Union and its allies have asserted their right to support "wars of liberation." Mr. Reagan would be stealing Fidel Castro's clothes if he went in at the tation of the "contras."

Could Mr. Reagan rest his case on Article 52 of the UN Charter, which permits regional organizations to deal with "such matters relating to the maintenance of international traces and security. peace and security as are appropriate for regional action"? Not easily. Agticle 52 carries the proviso that no "enforcement action" shall be taken without the vote of the Security Council. Needless to say, the Security Council would not authorize without Council would not authorize action against Nicaragua.

Finally, could it be "humanianian" or "democratic" intervention? Some scholars argue that international law permits countries to use force in the territory of another to ead human-rights abuses or to encourage democracy. Jeane Kirkpatrick former U.S. ambassador to the U.S. ed Nations, has used this argument to justify U.S. support of the contrast Yet with so many nondemocracies in the world, an honest application of this principle would lead to anarchy. So international law suggests that the only real case Mr. Reagan would have for going into Nicaragus would be to cut off Nicaragua's supply of weapons to El Salvador. But the United States has conspicuously failed to prove the accusation of state ous large-scale trafficking.

The truth is, in the eyes of intertional law, Mr. Reagan does not be much to stand on. Whether this will give him pause remains to be seen

Bonn's President Seeking to Lift Guilt for Nazis From the Young

By James M. Markham New York Times Service

P Y May 8, 1945, the day Nazi Germany capitulated, Richard Freihert von Weizsäcker, a 25-year-old Wehrmacht captain, had made it back to his grandmother's arm in southwestern Germany. The war had thoroundly affected the young baron. Nearly six years earlier, on the second day of Hitler's invasion of Poland, he had been 300 yards away when his older brother Heinrich was killed by a bullet that pierced his throat as he clambered over a railroad embankment. Richard kept mournful watch over his brother's body that Later wounded three times himself, he survived the rigors of the campaign in the Soviet Union and rose to the position of adjutant in the 9th Potsdam Infantry Regiment, a legendary unit steeped in the aloof, monarchial spirit of the Prussian aristocracy. So many of its officers. were implicated in the botched July 20, 1944, attempt on Hitler's life that the regiment was anally disbanded.

Yet, for Mr. von Weizsäcker, World War II did not really end on May 8. His father had been the Third Reich's top career diplomat for most of the war and was soon to be tried at Nuremberg as a war criminal. A law student, Richard would join his father's defense team and confront the full horrors of Hitler's 12-year Reich. On May 8, 1985, Richard von Weizsäcker, president of West Germany, climbed a podium in Boan's hushed parliament and, in a speech that distilled a life's experience, spoke out against forgetting. He declared that younger generations of Germans "cannot profess a guilt of their own for crimes they did not commit." No discerning person can expect them to wear a penitential robe simply because they are Germans," he continued. "But their forefathers have left them a grave legacy. All of us, whether guilty or not, whether young or old, must accept the past. We are all affected by the consequences and liable for it. The young and old generations must and can help each other to understand why it is vital to keep alive the Coming after a painful West German debate over President Ronald Reagan's visit to the Bitburg military cemetery — a debate in which tendencies to rewrite and present the pass to recollection simes ran stronger than impulses to recollection and contrition — President Weizsäcker's Bundestag speech had a cathartic impact.

There are other prominent German politicians who have tried to reconcile their nation's Nazi past and democratic present, but none can claim the kind of national influence and visibility that Mr. von Weizsäcker enjoys by virtue of high office.

Yet in his Bundestag speech, the president was able to transcend the Nazi nightmare and offer a message of hope to the uneasy generation of young West Germans who will soon inherit leadership of the most powerful nation in Westem Europe.

In this 40th anniversary year, the theme of Germans as victims - victims of ruthless Allied bombing raids over their cities, refugees from the pillaging and raping Red Army - has been running strong on German television shows and in the utterances of politicians. As the anti-Bitburg protests quickened, senior members of Mr. Kohl's center-right Christian Democratic Party managed to turn their sense of victimization into a weapon of outrage. In a letter to 53 U.S. senators who had urged the canceling of

On April 29, in a joint open letter to the chancellor, two officials from the Bitburg area went further: "The dead who lie at the military cemetery must not, after a cruel selection among the living over 40 years ago, be now made victims of a selection among the fallen, most of them youths."

In pitting himself against such revisionist uses of history, Richard von Weizsäcker has been forced to confront the moral ambiguities that cloud his own family's past. Some of his friends believe that he was determined to become president of West Germany, and remains determined to become a great president, in order to rehabilitate his family name.

From 1938 to 1943, his father, Ernst Freiherr von Weizsäcker, was chief state secretary in the Foreign Ministry under the vainglorious Joachim von Ribbentrop. The elder von Weizsacker at first adjusted easily to the collapse of the chaotic Weimar Republic and to the Third Reich's sterner methods. A conservative patriot, he embraced the idea of the expansion of the German Reich into the Sudetenland. Yet well into the Polish crisis of 1939, he believed that Hitler was prone to compromise and needed to be isolated from the warmongering Heinrich Himmler and Ribbentrop.

Richard von Weizsäcker has never written at length, or spoken publicly, about his father or our sector we are now dropping out."

his own role in the war, but on May 17 he settled himself into an armchair in Villa Hammer-schmidt, the presidential mansion by the Rhine, and in a candid two-hour interview, reminisced.

The president's manner is dispassionate and ironic — a warm chuckle punctuates his storytelling - and throughout, he seemed less interested in justifying than in explaining what he called his father's "failure."

It was, he said, a failure to understand Hitler when he came to power in 1933, a failure of believing that diplomats could sway the dictator from his warlike course, a failure to understand the impact of popular opinion on foreign policy and, finally, a failure of character. "My father was very honest but not very strong, not very outspoken," said the son.

HE president explicitly repudiated the view encouraged by his father's memoirs and some German bistorians, that the diplomat was at heart a member of the anti-Hitler resistance. But he said he was "deeply persuaded" that his father, who was imprisoned by the Nuremberg tribunal, was not a war criminal, and he recalled Churchill's comment that the Americans had made "a deadly error" in trying him.

"My father always took the position," he said, "that after such a dreadful war, with such things as happened, it was not surprising there should have been an indictment. But he had his duty in the face of this indictment to make his viewpoint clear and stand up for his name and the family name." The elder von Weizsäcker was granted amnesty after 18 months. He died in 1951.

Mr., von Weizsäcker's closest friend in the 9th Poisdam Infantry Regiment was Axel von dem Bussche-Streithorst, who became involved in a plot to blow up Hitler, and himself, with a specially equipped vest. The scheme, worked out with Count Claus Schenk von Stauffenberg. failed when the vest was destroyed in an air raid and the officer was wounded in combat.

In 1942, the impetuous Bussche-Streithorst investigated the murder of 1,000 Jews by SS troops at the Dubno airfield in the Soviet Union -an event of decisive importance for the young von Weizsäcker. He said that he had already been indoctrinated by his father to regard Hitler as "a misfortune," but that the Crystal Night and his friend's revelations about the SS "completed the picture of a misfortune into one of a

Mr. von Weizsäcker is disinclined to lionize his role in the war and passes harsh judgment on himself. "From young people like us," he said, one should have expected that we would have gotten better information because of the things we had seen with our own eyes." He sounded this theme in his Bundestag speech, saying that most Germans had been in a position to know about the persecution of the Jews. But just as his father could not bring himself to leave Hitler's service, so, too, the son could not resolve what he calls the "tension" between competing im-

In a conversation while he was mayor of West Berlin, he depicted a principal concern as "the failure of my generation to bring younger peo-ple into politics."

"The young people do not admire the moral substance of the older generation," he said. "Our economic achievement went along with a very materialistic and very selfish view of all problems. We have defined freedom as a sum of claims and rights, and not that of duties and BitBURG bared the profound cleavage that separates West Germany's postwar youth from their elders. Passion, selfpity, self-justification and the occasional flash of high moral argument — all this came from Germans old enough to have been in the war.

The young looked on as faintly concerned spectators, wondering when the past would really become the past, so they could live in a normal country; they did not crave the absolution that their parents and grandparents did. and, if numerous conversations are any guide, did not believe that the Third Reich's crimes could be simply washed away by the gesture of an American president they do not exactly ad-

"The reaction in the many letters I get," said the president, "is that younger people didn't particularly want Reagan to come to Bitburg. but didn't particularly like this kind of obsession and debates and arguments pro and con." He said that most young Germans had not adopted the views of Elie Wiesel, the Auschwitz survivor who spoke out fervently against Bitburg in the United States. He said that they were simply "shocked over this strange world in which suddenly, for weeks, nothing existed but

If Mr. von Weizsäcker succeeds in leaving a political legacy to Germany, it may be in reconciling emerging generations to paradox. It is a paradox — one that younger Germans have trouble embracing — that the most tolerant and successful democracy in German history was built by men and women who emerged from the moral ruins of Nazism. Few were free of some kind of complicity with the past, and many were spiritually lamed, but these burdens did not condemn the democracy they erected.

The president does not boast about this transition, and in his Bundestag speech he phrased it with characteristic restraint: "There was no 'zero hour,' but we had the opportunity to make a fresh start. We have used this opportunity as well as we could."

His truest legacy, though, may ultimately be in confronting Germans unflinchingly with their past, so that they can go move surefootedly into the future. Almost doggedly, Mr. Kohl likes 10 say, "We Germans have learned the lessons of the past." Behind this oft-repeated cliché lies an impatience, an eagerness to get out of the past, even to bury it.

Mr. von Weizsäcker's life has taught him to be more wary. "When one looks into history 40 or 50 years later," he said, "it is better as a young person to judge someone for having behaved wrongly if one has also experienced such a There was always the tension that one was a situation. Mengele in Brazil: Acquaintances Call His Life on the Run Reclusive, Ordinary

sion of Nicaragu

By Ralph Blumenthal New York Times Service

AO PAULO, Brazil — The man identified by associates and scientists here as Josef Mengele, the long-sought fugitive Nazi war criminal, led a reclusive life for nearly two decades in and around Brazil's largest city, according to neighbors, friends and a house-maid who says she loved him.

They portray the man as an authoritarian figure, but also someone who was cultivated and sometimes charming. They say he spent his days the cluded farms and simple cottages, teaded sick animals, disparaged black people and kept a diary but never publicly discussed history or politics, and liked to watch "Disneyland" on

The accounts, given in media interviews and in depositions to the Brazilian police, help explain how the man - now identified by forensic experts as the Auschwitz death-camp doctor -managed to escape his pursuers for so long only to drown, as his former protectors here say, in a swimming accident in 1979.

In fact, the story of a robust but lonely exile that now is emerging here bears almost no resemblance to the often lurid accounts over the years of a surgery-altered Dr. Mengele, sur-rounded by armed guards, torturing Indians or serving as the personal physician of President Alfredo Stroessner of Paraguay.

According to the accounts given so far, the man identified as Dr. Mengele arrived in Brazil from Paraguay in 1961 and was taken in hand by a former Austrian Nazi corporal, Wolfgang Gerhard, who had been living in Brazil since 1952. He died in 1975 in Graz, Austria.

In 1961, Mr. Gerhard introduced his friend as Peter Hochbichlet, a Swiss, to Geza and Gitta Stammer, Hungarians who had spent World War II in Budapest and settled in Brazil in 1948. Mr. Stammer was a surveyor who took property in payment for some of his work and the Stammers agreed to let "Peter" manage a small farm of theirs in the Austrian and German colony of Nova Europa in Araraquara, about 200 miles (320 kilometers) northwest of São Paulo, where the Stammers had moved in 1959.

In 1962, the Stammers moved to another farm at Serra Negra, about 100 miles from São Paulo, and "Peter" followed. It was there, Mrs. Stamher said, that she happened to see a newspaper photograph of Dr. Mengele of Auschwitz and questioned her visitor about the resemblance. At first he denied the connection, she told the police, but that evening acknowledged he was Dr. Mengele. He ended up living under the family's protection for the next dozen years.

RS. Stammer, 65, said that Mr. Gerhard threatened the family if they gave away the secret. She also said the Austrian had told them: "You used to be nobodies. unknown. Now a great thing has happened in your lives." She said the man they knew as Dr. Mengele never threatened the family himself, but instead had chided Mr. Gerhard for doing

"The people in Hungary didn't know what happened until later," she said when questioned about Nazi atrocities. But she also said she had she did not feel guilty about having sheltered him because the family had been "manipulated" into helping him.

Mrs. Stammer said her family was Roman Catholic. She said she heard Dr. Mengele say that the Jews were working against Germany and were a foreign group that the Germans wanted out of the country. She also said he once mentioned having contracted typhus at Ausch-witz but that otherwise he avoided any discussion about the war. Other witnesses in Serra Negra told the police that the Stammer farm had an eight-foot (about 2.5-meter) observation tower on the roof and that the visitor used to go up there with binoculars to scan the countryside. The period coincides with the time Dr. Mengele was being intensively hunted by the Israelis, who missed capturing him at the same time they seized the Nazi official Adolf Eichmann in Buenos Aires

Dr. Mengele stayed with the Stammers until 1974 when he moved into a small yellow stucco house also owned by the Stammers on the Strado do Alvarenga in an outlying area of São Paulo near the suburb of Santa Amaro. Mrs. Stammer said Dr. Mengele had told her be attended his father's funeral in 1959 in the family's hometown of Gunzburg, West Germany. She said that in all the years "Peter" stayed with the family, he never left the house for more than a day or two at a time and never took any extensive trips, an account that conflicts with widespread reported sightings of Dr. Mengele in Paraguay and elsewhere in the 1960s and 1970s.

She also said that he received no visits from strangers but that Hans Sedimeier, an official of the Mengele family company, came for two days in the early 1960s and for three days in the early 1970s to bring Dr. Mengele altogether about $7,000 in U.S. currency.
Mrs. Stammer said that Dr. Mengele had several ailments, including a chronic swelling of his entire left leg, rheumatism in his hands and The man identified as the Nazi doctor also was briefly hospitalized for a stroke in 1976, according to accounts given to the police in

Across the street, a retired metalworker, Jaime Martins dos Santos, said he knew his German neighbor only as "Mr. Pedro" and that they had spent much time together. He said that "Mr. Pedro" had a Mauser pistol that he would keep by day in a locked box in his bedroom and at night by the bed. He described "Mr. Pedro" as sometimes moody and a man who would make remarks disparaging about black people. But Mr. dos Santos said that the man never made any reference to lews.

He and others said that "Mr. Pedro" was clearly partial to a former housemaid, Elsa Gupian de Olivera. Mrs. de Olivera, a thin-faced 34-year-old woman with bleached hair, confirmed in an interview that the man she also knew as "Mr. Pedro" in 1977 and 1978 had told her he loved her and wanted her to live with him.

During the interview, she wore a white woolen shawl she said he had given her on Nov. 4, 1978. She said they never had an intimate physical relationship. She acknowledged with a shy laugh that she had loved him too but had insisted on getting married, which, she said, he had declined to do. She said she had asked him often whether he was married and that he swore to her he was not but that he could not tell her why he could not marry her.

A former gardener at the house on Alvarenga Street, Luis Rodrigues, said that "Mr. Pedro" used to be lonely and often invited him to sit with him in the house late into the evening. He said that "Mr. Pedro" long resisted buying a television set but finally acceded and soon be-came addicted to watching "Disneyland" and a soap opera called "Slave Isaura," about a slave

"Mr. Pedro" seemed particularly distraught in his last days, several who saw him then agree. Three days before the drowning, Mr. Rodri-gues said, "Mr. Pedro" was nearly hit by a bus on the steep hill in front of his house. He may have started to sway and faint as the bus ap-proached, the gardener recalled, and the bus slammed on its brakes, grazing "Mr. Pedro's" arm. Another time, Mrs. Mehlich recalled, he nearly fell in the well behind the house.

The Bosserts had arranged an outing at near-by Bertioga Beach for the weekend of Feb. 7, 1979, in the Brazilian summer, but "Mr. Pedro" agonized over whether to go, Mrs. Mehlich recalled She said she told him the outing would relax him and recalled that he replied, "I'm retax him and recailed that he replied, "I in going to the beach because my life is ending."
He took the public bus and met the Bosserts there. At the beach, the Bosserts told the police, their friend appeared to have a stroke in the water and drawled despite the efforts of Mr.

Bossert to save him. Witnesses have told the police that they saw a man fitting Dr. Mengele's description lying un-conscious on the beach with the Bosserts bend-

Firms Count Cost of Failing To Study Expatriate Stress

INTERNATIONAL MANAGER

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

International Herald Tribune

ARIS — Selecting executives who adjust well to a foreign environment can be difficult. The most technically competent executive may not always be the best person. The wrong choice is expensive for the company and traumatic for the individual, Depending on the length of the assignment, the location the adaptability of the executive and the family the the location, the adaptability of the executive and the family, the expatriate attrition rate among companies can be high.

An expatriate assignment is considered a failure when the expatriate family is sent home before the end of the assignment because of an inability to cope in a foreign country.

Because companies do not like to talk about failure among their expatriate personnel, it is difficult to get accurate fig-ures. According to U.S. expa-triate-training companies, Saudi Arabia ranks high on the failure-rate list, with a 60to 100-percent failure rate, depending on the project.

Co., the subsidiary of the U.S. aerospace company that services F-16s, believes that an 8-percent attrition rate in Egypt is a success.

But you do not have to go to exotic locations to find adjustment problems. Texas Instruments and Digital Equipment Corp. admitted problems with employees based in the south of France, where wives have difficulty fitting in.

Rosalie Tung, professor of management at the Wharton Business School, University of Pennsylvania, has just published the final results of a comparative study of expatriate failure rates among U.S., European and Japanese companies, the first work of its kind.

RS. TUNG selected a sample of 80 U.S., 30 European and 30 Japanese companies. Japanese concerns had the lowest expatriate failure rate and U.S. companies, the

Depending on the company, she found, 5 to 30 percent of U.S. executives sent overseas went home before finishing their assignment. In half of the U.S. companies, 10 to 15 percent of expatriates did not complete their assignment. In 10 percent of these companies, 30 percent of expatriates were sent home before the

By contrast, less than 10 percent of European executives and less than 5 percent of Japanese executives went home before finishing their assignment, the study found. The sample of West European companies included British, Italian, German and Swiss emopeanies. But no French companies participated in the survey.

Psychiatrists, psychologists and companies who specialize in training expatriates believe most corporations do not do enough to select the best people to send abroad, and are offering companies a variety of new ways to make a better selection.

According to experts, all executives sent overseas experience some degree of culture shock. Culture-shock symptoms range from home-sickness, a need for too much sleep, compulsive eating and drinking, marital stress, hostility towards host nationals and crying fits. In extreme cases, failure to cope with culture shock can result in psychiatric illness.

"It is only just being recognized that expatriate stress is a separate problem," says Peter Marnow, administrator of the Charter Clinic in London. "In terms of psychiatric illness, it isn't different from every day psychiatric illness, but the fact of being an 'expat' makes you much more susceptible to psychiatric

New research on expatriate stress is currently being done in Britain. Dr. Ricky Caplan, a psychiatrist at St. George's Hospital Medical School in London, is conducting a three-year study of expatriate couples to determine how well they cope with stress (Continued on Page 14, Col. 4)

IBM has agreed to take over full responsibility for the SBS business, including its outstanding debt, and to make future cash investments in MCI. IBM estimates SBS's debt at $400 million.

Based in Miclean, Virginia, SBS uses satellites to offer corporate customers low-cost, long-distance telephone service. MCI uses microwaves to offer long-distance service, generally to residential users and small businesses.

Under the accord, IBM will receive 45 million shares, or about 16 percent, of MCI common stock and warrants for an additional sev-en million shares of MCI common stock at $15 a share. IBM has agreed to hold the shares for a nimum of three years.

IBM also said it would not increase its total interest in MCI common stock beyond 30 percent without MCI's approval.

MCI stock, traded over-the-

U.S. Textile Industry Dresses Up To Counter Foreign Competition

By William P. Schmidt New York Times Service EASLEY, South Carolina —

From the road, the red brick mill looks like scores of other textile plants scattered across the low rolling hills of South Carolina's Piedmont area. But inside the walls of Alice Manufacturing Co.'s Elljean mill, one of five fabric factories the small familyowned manufacturer operates here in rural Pickens County, the changes are dramatic.

In rooms where workers once moved through a fog of cotton dust, powerful vacuum hoses now glide along rails suspended from the low calling, keeping the air cleared of lint. The old clackety-clack shuttle looms have been replaced by sleek high-speed weaving machines. And throughout the plant, television screens hooked to a central comrester flicker a continuous stream of data measuring the perfor-mance and efficiency of each piece of equipment on the floor.

"There have been more changes in the textile industry during the last five years than in the previous 100," says Ellison S. McKissick Jr., who not only presides over Alice, a company his father and grandfather founded in 1923, but also is the president of the American Textile Manufacturers Institute, the industry's national trade organization.

As Mr. McKissick is quick to acknowledge, these are turbulent times for America's oldest manufacturing industry. Buffeled by a 65 percent increase since 1982 in the volume of imports of apparel, fabric and other textile products, manufacturers are scrambling to reposition themselves, investing billions in new equipment and marketing strategies in an effort to regain a competitive turers, who fashion the mills' output of print-cloth, denim and other fabrics into dresses, jackets and jeans - has increasingly been overtaken by imports, mostly sewn goods made out of fabric woven and finished in the Far East. Industry figures estimate that, as of last year, imports accounted for 43 percent of the clothing sold in this country.

But more recently, imports have begun to penetrate the market for even basic textile materials, such as raw yarn and unfinished fabric, and household goods like draperies, sheets and owels, which are items that until 1983 were virtually free of for-

The flood of new imports, which has surged on the strength of the dollar, has raised questions about the future of yarn and cloth manufacturers. Only a decade ago they employed more than a million people in 36 states, with nearly half of those jobs here in North and South Carolina. U.S. Orders for Durable Goods Up 4.1% in May

WASHINGTON -- Orders for durable goods, led by a huge in-crease in military orders, jumped 4.1 percent in May, the biggest in-crease in six months, the U.S. Commerce Department said Tuesday.
The department said that orders for manufactured durable goods totaled $103.8 billion last month, compared with $99.7 billion in April. The month-to-month gain was the biggest increase since an 8.2-advance in November.

In April, orders for durable goods rose only 0.2 percent after declining 2.9 percent in March and 2.5 percent in February.

Demand for manufactured products has been particularly weak in recent months as foreign competitors have taken sales from U.S.

This battering has been blamed for a dramatic slowdown in overall economic growth during the first three months of the year, when the gross national product advanced at a minuscule annual rate of 0.3 percent. GNP measures the total value of a nation's goods and services, including income from foreign in-But analysts said that Tuesday's report provided encouragement that the U.S. manufacturing sector -and the whole economy - may improve soon.

"I think we are out of the doldrums," said Michael Evans, head of Evans Economics, a Washington consulting firm. "People are beginning to realize that the economy is back on track. The decline in interest rates is prompting businesses to go ahead with projects they had put on the shelf."

The government estimated last week that growth in the GNP had rebounded to 3.1 percent for the current quarter, easing fears that the economy was headed into a

Orders in the key category of non-military capital goods were up a slight 0.9 percent following a 6.6-percent decline in April. This category is watched closely for signals of industry plans to expand or modernize production facilities.

By industry category, orders for transportation equipment were up 12.6 percent with an increase in demand by the military accounting for almost all of the increase.

Shipments of durable goods in May increased a slight 0.5 percent following an even smaller 0.1-percent gain in April. Shipments of durable goods so far this year were described by the government as

Bonn Panel In Turnabout On Tax Issue

By Warren Getler

FRANKFURT -- Bonn's Council of Economic Advisers has said that it now supports accelerating a planned 19.4-billion Deutsche mark ($6.31-billion) tax cut into one step rather than in two stages as mandated by the government.

The influential, independent adrisory group of economists normally issues a report in November. But it presented an unusual, 18-page special report this week urging a one-step tax cut to spur growth and

The council had previously stated its support for the tax cut in two stages — 11 billion DM in 1986 and 9 billion in 1988 — as promot-ed by Finance Minister Gerhard Stoltenberg and recently approved by both houses of the Bundestag.

West Germany's five leading economic-research institutes have also called for a one-stage cut. The council's report was scheduled for release next week, but was made available Monday as Mr. Stoltenberg detailed proposed changes in the government's 1986

WASHINGTON — A banking group has reported that in the face of a relatively sound economy, a record number of U.S. families have been falling behind in their monthly mortgage payments. Far fewer, but still a near-record number, are losing their homes to foreclosure.

The Mortgage Bankers Association said Monday that payments on 6.19 percent of all bome mortgages had fallen 30 days or more into arrears during the first three months of this year. It was the highest figure in the 22 years that the association has been monitoring mortgage payments.

The association, which represents banks and savings institutions, said that in the first quarter this year, lenders had begin foreclosure proceedings on 0.24 percent of all home loans, a relatively small figure but unusually high by historical standards. It said that 0.79 percent of all mortgages outstanding were being foreclosed at the end of the quarter.

Earlier, the Federal Home Mortgage Association, a private, government-created investment organization, disclosed that 1.17 percent of the loans it had bought are in foreclosure, the high-est figure since the mid-1970s.

And the Department of Housing and Urban Development said that 30,000 of the loans that it guaranteed through the Federal Home Administration were foreclosed in 1984, the last period for which it has figures. The foreclosures exceeded the 1983 figure by 5,000. Experts cited various factors, including an unemployment rate, at 7.2 percent, that is unusually high for a growing economy; slight declines in family incomes after the effects of inflation are removed; and especially hard times in certain sectors of the economy, such as family farms.

"Looking at the state data, the number of foreclosures is particularly high in the farm belt — Iowa, Illinois, North Dakota, Kansas — and in the timber belt — Oregon," said Warren Lasko, executive vice president of the Mortgage Bankers Association.

A still-bigger cause, however, may be that declines in the rate of increase of home prices, to less than 4 percent annually nationwide, and actual price declines in some parts of the coun-

What you're really seeing is another of the many examples of stress the system goes through in the transition from a high-inflation economy to a low-inflation economy," said Timothy Howard, chief economist at the Federal National Mortgage Association, known as

When home prices were rising at a rate of 10 percent a year in the 1970s, Mr. Howard said, a family could buy, for example, a $90,000 home with a mortgage of $80,000. In two years the home might have been worth $110,000, so the owner's equity was $30,000. That gave the owner's er a strong incentive to keep up monthly pay-ments, even in the face of financial difficulty. Today, in extreme cases, the value of a $90,000 home might have fallen in two years to

$75,000. The owner then has no equity and, except for the down payment, has little to lose by forgoing payments. State laws allow an owner to remain in the house without making any payments, sometimes for a year or more, so the owner is able to live there free of mortgage or rental payments until the bank finally claims

"He can say the heck with it and not make a payment;" Mr. Howard said. "There's nothing he bank can do."

Racal Electronics Posts 10% Increase in Profit

LONDON — Racal Electronics PLC said Tuesday that its pretax profit rose 10 percent in the year ended March 31, to £132.31 million ($165.4 million), from £119.25 million a vear earlier.

Sales in the period rose 36 per-cent to £1.11 billion, from £815.65 million, Racal said. On a per-share basis, profit rose to 15.55 pence from 14.81 pence a year earlier. Racal said the profit figures included a post-acquisition contribu-tion of Chubb & Son PLC.

The pretax profit of Chubb for the full year ended March 31 amounted to £16.5 million, Racel FRANKFURT — Philipp Holzmann AG, the West German construction concern, said Tuesday that net profit in 1984 fell 14 percent from a year earlier, to 42.1 million Deutsche marks ($13.6 million Deutsche 1987). lion), from 48.7 million DML Sales declined 8.5 percent, to 2.97 billion DM, from 3.24 billion DM in 1983.

Despite an increase of more than 100 percent in U.S. orders during the first five months of this year, the company's overall group profits for 1985 could decline, the manage-ment board chairman, Hermann Becker, said. The strong U.S. per-formance will not offset continued weak performance at home and in foreign markets, he said.

But to bring the accounting poli-cies of Chubb into line with those of Racal, it was necessary to make a provision of £1.51 million, leaving a pretax profit of £15 million for Chubb.

Extraordinary expenditure of Chubb amounted to £7.6 million net of tax, the majority of which was in respect of discontinued businesses and related to the pre-acqui-sition period, Racal said.

Racal acquired Chubb last October. Analysts saw in the £180-million purchase a chance for Racal to improve its flagging profit performance last year.

The British electronics concern blamed the poor performance a year ago on problems at its California-based Racal-Vadic unit, a maker of low-speed moderns which are used to help transmit data between

Like some other electronics concerns, the unit overestimated the market for personal computers. In addition, the Racal unit ran into problems with a chip for a modem designed to fit into a computer, analysts said.

But Racal is more optimistic about the current year. The company said pretax profits for the first half of the current year are expect-ed to be less than in the year-earlier period because of the planned increase in costs associated with the expansion of cellular radio, higher interest charges and the slow start to orders by U.S. companies.

However, for the full year Racal forecast record profits but said that growth will depend on the strength

Members Of Lloyd's Plan Talks

By Colin Chapman

LONDON - Members of Lloyd's of London, facing losses of about £130 million ($166.5 million) after a fraud involving nearly £40 million three years ago, are to meet Friday to discuss withholding funds they have been ordered to pay by the exchange.

Owned by the British insurance brokers, Minet Holdings, Richard Beckett was formerly PCW Underwriting Agencies, also a Minet sub-sidiary. Three years ago PCW executives were alleged to have been involved in the misappropriation of the £40 million.

Minet said the resulting losses are the responsibility of its members, not the Minet group. Under Lloyd's rules, each member of a syndicate, including those who have merely invested but take no active part in its business, have unlimited liability for the syndicate's

Some of the members face bankruptcy because of the council's or-der to pay by July 31. At their talks on Friday, they also will be study-ing a variety of legal moves against Richard Beckett.

Throughout the investigation into the fraud, the council of Lloyd's has insisted that members of syndicates involved should meet their underwriting losses. But the members argue that the losses are directly the result of the PCW fraud.

The members also challenge the validity of an agreement they signed with Minet last year which provided compensation for losses due to fraud in exchange for their promise not to take further legal

Officials at Lloyd's repeated Tuesday that the members known as Names, because most are not professional insurers but nota-ble individuals who join Lloyd's as a profitable and prestigions bobby - would have to honor the claims.

The only bright spot for the syndicates is a study by the accounting firm Price Waterhouse. According to the members' action committee. the study "contains information which was not made available to Names at the time of the 1984 offer (on compensation with Minet) but which would have been material to any decision to accept that offer."

The committee says it does not think the Lloyd's Names should take immediate legal action, but should withhold the funds owed.

The Stress Cost

One extreme example of an exec- utive's inability to cope with cultural shock resulted in a company liestinguished young lady pa quidating the subsidiary he had set up. A few years ago a U.S. mechanical engineering company sent one Young Elegant Lady of its most capable managers to PA. PARIS 525 81 01 open a subsidiary in Nigeria. ground, the textile manufacturers have mounted an insistent campaign to persuade President Ron-ald Reagan and Congress to tighten controls on imports and protect their sales, which totaled $55 biltion last year. But at the same time, manufacturers have embarked on a variety of strategies on their own, ranging from pumping billions into long overdue plant-modernization programs to new marketing programs to increase revenues from high-margin fashion products that imports cannot yet reach.

With investor confidence low, and most textile stocks selling at a sharp discount, some public companies have gone the route of leveraged buyouts. At least six since 1982 have turned private, including Cannon Mills and Dan River Inc.

While a weaker dollar and tighter enforcement of trade quotas have helped a bit with imports this year, there has been no sign of a domestic recovery yet. Imports of textiles and apparel through April were off 4.4 percent from last year's record pace, for example, but domestic shipments over the same period still dropped 8.5 percent.

According to statistics from the Textile Manufacturers Institute, the industry processed more than 8 pounds of fiber an hour, up from 6.6 pounds in 1973 — an annual increase of more than 4 percent. Still, the textile industry was slow to modernize. Even now, bare-

Our mid-year outlook of the U.S. stockmarket is low on interest...

Lower interest rates. Higher returns, for investors wise enough to move into the right markets now. These are two of the key messages in our latest review of the U.S. stockmarket, Position for Profit.

The report, prepared by our New York analysts, concludes that the U.S. government is serious about reducing the deficit, and also bringing the dollar down to make U.S. industry more competitive.

That should lead not just to a rally on the bond market, but a veritable bonanza. And stocks sensitive to interest rates, such as insurance and utilities, should also benefit.

In our report, we put forward ten specific stocks to buy, and recommendations like these could enable you to plan a more rewarding portfolio. Our clients receive such reports, and others relating to their portfolio, regularly. In the past year, many of our controversial judgements on dollar levels and commodity prices, for example, have been proved correct by events.

And our clients know that, should a portfolio change be in order, a local phone call is all it takes. Because we have a network of offices in Europe and around the world. You can visit your Wall Street brokers, and gain the advice of a professional team, without leaving the country.

Send for our view of the US, stockmarket today. Post the coupon and we'll send you a courtesy copy of our Mid-Year Outlook.

But high on reward.

ON WRITING AND POLITICS: 1967-1983.

IN THIS collection of essays and speeches, Gilmter Grass, the German novelist, poet, graphic artist and political activist, seems to be divided into two parts like his country and to be waging a kind of cold war within himself. It is not simply that the book is divided into "On Writing" and "On Politics." The division in Grass goes deeper than that. Half of him is witty, intellectually playful, anti-ideological, an observer of history who after all his experi-ences with time and its contrary course has inscribed "a slow-moving animal in my es-cutcheon and said: Progress is a snail." The other half is shrill, ideological, polemical, an oversimplifier of history who seems to contradict his insistence that "there is no such thing as a jumping snail."

One part of Grass has written thoughtful essays on Franz Kafka and Alfred Doblin, the author of such nearly forgotten books as "Wal-lenstein," "Mountains, Oceans and Giants" and "Berlin Alexanderplatz," whom Grass embraces as his mentor. The other part sees the world as black and white, demands that writers be politically engaged, if only because of the history of the cold war.

Many readers will insist that there is no contradiction between the two parts of Grass that seem to be set in opposition here. But I submit a subjective defense of my division of all Grass into two parts: One is interesting to read and the other is not. It is, for example, highly absorbing to follow his elegant historical analysis in "Erfurt 1970 and 1891," an address delivered in Baden-Baden in 1970 in which he tries to show how a 19th-century congress held by the Social Democratic Party ultimately led to the geographical division be-tween the two Germanys. It is gratifying to encounter Grass's dismissal of the television series "Holocaust" for failing to reveal anything about the roots of German anti-Ser tism, and to watch him try to redress the failure

It is boring to read Grass on technology. industrial waste, missile arms and the imminent arrival of the end of time. What he has to say has been said so many times before. Worse, it's disturbing to find it boring because, if what he says is true, as it well may be, then we one to be awakened to the threats instead of numbed by their repetition. Fortunately, there is more of the interesting side of Grass in "On Writing and Politics" than there is of the boring side.

AFTER hearing one heart On the left and one spade on the right, South could not resist a one no-trump bid on the diagramed deal. He was king. East played the spade deuce, and South won with the jack. He could have cashed his snade winners but not unnaturally led a diamond, trying for West won and tried the club queen with a gratifying result. East overtook and shifted to the heart eight. West captured bucky in the circumstances to find two jacks in the dummy, but they did him no good.

West decided to lead a spade in the hope that East would gain the lead to play hearts through South's presumed thinks so South probably just takes, so South probably just takes the pack with the queen and led another club. When the smoke another club. When the smoke taken 10 consecutive tricks and collected 400 points.

Fine-Tuning Prevention and Punishment

LONDON -- An open letter to the Union of European Football Associations, which is to hear appeals by Liverpool and Juventus against punishments following the European Cup final at which 38 speciators were killed.

Gentlemen: Your decisions, postponed from this weekend until early August, are on behalf of the 18 million who play and the hundreds of millions who get caught up in the passions of European soccer. May we expect, then, more than cursory statements on actions that affect us all? Obviously you cannot be seen to take the atrocity lightly. Neither, surely, should UEFA or big brother FIFA or any self-elected sporting authority dump responsibility for a catastrophe that had been many years in the making onto scapegoats who happened to be there at the time.

You have already made two quite distinct deliberations. Your emergency committee, meeting days after the May 29th tragedy in Brussels, imposed the logical indef-inite ban on English clubs from European competitions for as long as their followers are deemed a threat to life, limb and property.

Most Englishmen accept that Your disciplinary committee last No. week apportioned specific blame, barring Liverpool for at least three seasons beyond the indefinite sentence, ordering Juventus to make two home defenses of the European Cup behind closed doors and placing Belgium out of bounds for any European final for 10 years. I believe UEFA met in panic and got it right, then sat down and made a mess of the thing. The preventative instinct is more valid than the punitive afterthought. Do not misunderstand. My country has so persistently allowed her drunken hordes the freedom of also have a conscience about what Europe that the sweeping total barr went wrong. is necessary. The "opposition" has not been all innocent but, let's face it, the British are detonators wherever ferryboats will carry them—although not further afield, where FIFA's ban against English clubs, playing outside the reach of the psychopaths, is unwarranted. Punishment rather than prevention again.

UEFA has had such a policy for years - banishing cubs, enforcing games in empty stadiums, collect-ing masses of Swiss francs in fines. With what result? Where does accountability end? Belgium seems almost relieved by your 10-year embargo. Its soccer union bridles at suggestions that Heysel Stadium was "dilapidated," by imputation too insecure a prison to hold the English animals. Its police have accepted some measure of blame, although your colleagues speak of "particularly inadequate" security.

Wouldn't it help if, just once, you who administer the game and who sit in judgment were to hold up your hands and say: We chose the stadium and we were satisfied that security was sufficient, so we in England, I'm afraid, the buck also gets kicked around. Our government, whose minister for sport continues in office despite years ofdenying the extent of problem, still is not ready to withdraw passports even of convicted hooligans. True, the prime minister is now aware of the disgrace. For all of three months Margaret Thatcher has, like you, let it be known clubs must "put their houses in order." That means banning alcohol at grounds and it means identity cards, which may ultimately be carried by all who are not hooligans. What we do not see is government bearing responsibility for the society that produces violence, around soccer and beyond, or offering anything back from its £220 million (about $283 million) taxation of soccer.

Nowhere, in the depressing af-termath of the Heysel horror, is there sufficient mention of positive things. Many found the spectacle of a game too much to take after laughter, yet we should acknowledge that you in UEFA did the same thing to prevent further

Even in Belgium, where anti-British feeling ran so high that an English schoolboy team was barred, there was last week a heartwarming gesture. A Kent police soccer team, forbidden to play in the Gendarmerie Nationale tourgrounds and on transport to nament at Vilvoorde, actually won two trophies there.

How come? First the organizers, awarded them the sporting team ty, even if they've never had an prize. Then Eindhoven, the tour-incident in 100 years, they can jolly nament champion, handed its trophy to the Kent manager.
None of those acts diminishes in any way the loss of life or the need to prevent a repetition of Brussels. But they are a start in restoring relationships between the mass of well-intentioned soccer people.

If UEFA wants to get aboard that movement, by all means pun-ish the proven guilty but show us justice and dividends as well. And speaking of dividends, I ap-preciate that UEFA did not, this time, extract blood money. Nevertheless, your coffers filled up nicely last week with fines totaling 135,000 Swiss francs (against Bor-deaux, Inventus, Rapid Vienna and

Sabatini rallied to beat Amanda Brown, 3-6, 6-3, 6-3. After a nervous start on her Wimbledon debut, the No. 15 seed recovered her composure and had too many shots for the Briton. Earlier this month, Sabatini, 15, became the youngest player ever to reach the semifinals of the French Open. The French is played on slow clay, and Sabatini said she had to change her style slightly for Wim-bledon's grass surface. "I am having to learn to come to the net a little bit more," she said.

After eight breaks in nine game in the final set, Sabatini advanced to the second round on her fourth match point.

Earlier, officials had announced that Tuesday's last matches scheduled for each of the 17 courts had been abandoned because of the persistent rain. That meant a second suspension of 17-year-old West German Boris Becker's firstrounder against American Hank Pfister and of Kevin Curren's clash with Larry Stefanki.

The Navratilova-Bonder encounter was, to that point, only the match. Amid Monday's worst opening-day weather in 16 years. second-seeded Ivan Lendi of Czechoslovakia had edged Ameri-can Mel Purcell, 6-4, 7-6, 7-6; as of Monday night, the tournament was 66 matches behind schedule.

A loser to Sweden's Mats Wilander in the 1985 French Open final Lendi needed four match points to move into the second round. He said he and Purcell had problems with their footing on the slippery court. "Once I was pulled wide, I had to go for a winner because there was no way I could come back." Lendi said.

"I don't think the players should be able to stop the game. I think the referee or umpire should determine when we can't play. I think he made a mistake by letting us play.

"I cannot think about it on the court, but the chances were very high that something might happen. It was not fair to ask us to play and not fair for the match. I knew it was dangerous, and so did the umpire who saw us sliding. Why did they stop the other match and not ours? I'm happy I have it over with and

After capturing the second-set tiebreaker 7-2, Lendl had a chance to close out the match in the ninth game of the third set. But Purcell, a scrambler, saved three match points and held serve to knot the score at 5-5.

The two players then fought to 6-6. sending the third set to a tie-

DETROIT (AP) — Harry Neale, former coach and general manager of the Vancouver Canucks, on Monday was named coach of the National Hockey League Detroit Red Wings. Neale, the 18th man in 60 seasons to coach the Red Wings, replaces Nick Polano, who on Friday assumed the position of assistant general manager in charge of player development. Neale, 48, joined the Canucks in May 1978 and compiled a 142-189-79 record during his seven seasons with the team. In 60 games last year,

No. To Weinberger, I suspect, each is a monkey wrench tossed into the great war engine of American peace. It cannot be pleasant for him to think in terms of monkey wrenches, either, for though there is as yet no scandalous exposure of a spendthrift Pentagon paying $10,000 apiece for monkey wrenches, Weinberger, never sure now of what excess may be disclosed next. must be waiting for the next item in our poem to drop:

An ashtray, a coffeepot, a toilet seat, a monkey wrench . . .

But enough. Distracted by the poetic muse, I wander from the point of this discussion, which has to do with the grave mistake President Reagan made when he dethroned the welfare queen. As long as the welfare queen was around to take the heat for the high cost of government, the Pentago could pay as much as it liked for ashtrays, coffeepots and toilet seats. Nobody much cared as long as the detestable welfare queen ex-

Does everybody remember the welfare queen? She made regular appearances in Reagan's speeches in the old days, driving her Cadillac to pick up her welfare check, vacationing in Acapulco, drinking champagne at Maxim's. Do I overstate slightly? Perhaps, but only to convey quickly to you the concept of welfare queenhood. The important point is that she served a vital political purpose. To people out of office - as Reagan was when he popularized her — she

When a lot of voters believe the government is spending their money improperly (that is, on other people), the blame for this squandering must be skillfully placed. Out of office, Reagan could blame welfare queens. Welfare queens crystallized public anger about big budgets into public hostility against government programs to help the unemployable classes.

That was useful in getting Reagan elected but left him in a pickle afterward, because if he went ahead and cut the bejeebers out of government programs for these people, who were the voters going to have left to blame for the immutable fact that government costs a lot of mon-

As president, neither Reagan nor the people who are said to do most of his thinking thought the problem through. Well, after all those years of knocking the old welfare queen, the president hadn't much choice, and he did what his voters wanted

As a result we don't hear much complaining anymore about "bums on welfare," though I now hear the same people who used to do the bums-on-welfare speech raving about threats to their Social Securitv. college loans, tax loopholes, etc. How could this be explained after Reagan dealt so firmly with the

And suddenly Secretary Weinberger sees everything endangered, Congress angry and punitive, the voters not so eager anymore to spend every last cent for the great war engines of peace. It takes so little to draw the public's rage — an ashtray, a coffeepot, a toilet

If you love the Pentagon you must sigh nostalgically for the days of the welfare queen.

Pages From Life of Sir Richard Burton

For Sale: A Remarkable Victorian Collection by a Remarkable Victorian

By Rebecca Brite al Herald Tribu

ONDON - A remarkably complete Victorian library, owned by one of the most remarkable of Victorians, is on the block. Price for the more than 2,000 books, bound pamphlets, maps and documents in the working library of Sir Richard Francis Burton: $1 million. Best known as an explorer, translator and Arabist, Burton was a prodigious linguist, is considered one of the founders of modern ethnology, and wrote with equal facility and fecundity on an assounding range of other subjects, from botany and archae-ology to falconry and swords-manship. In 1855 he became the first European to visit Harar, one of the forbidden cities of Islam, and live to tell about it. Though he was not the first Westerner to make the pilgrimage to Mecca, his account of his adventure disguised as an Indian physician is widely held to be the finest description on record. He discovered Lake Tanganyika, believing it the source of the Nile, and his bitter quarrel with his erstwhile partner in exploration, John Hanning Speke - discoverer of the true source. Lake Victoria — brought him the kind of notoriety that mingled with fame throughout his life. His crowning achievement, a 16-volume translation of the Arabian Nights, caused nearly as much outrage as acclaim in some quarters because of its copious and scrupulously detailed footnotes on Eastern sexual practices, Bur-

ton's interest in sexual behavior and erotica was not unusual for a Victorian gentleman, but his scorn of hypocrisy about it was. The Burton library was housed for many years at Kensington Library, where much of it was damaged in a flood. In 1955 it was sent to the Royal Anthropological Institute, which oversaw the restoration of the books and the compilation of a catalog. The institute, to raise money for a new head-quarters building, is now selling the library with the proviso that it be kept intact and available to its contents should be of partic- his speed at learning languages, train Turkish irregular cavalry, ular value to historians because of Burton's habit of margin-scribbling In an act still capable of rendering ordinarily phlegmatic scholars purple with rage, Burton's wife burned 40 years' worth of diaries, journals and manuscripts after his death; thus his extensive annotations on the pages and endpapers of his books are among the only clues remaining to the private workings of his extraordinary mind. Richard Burton was born in Devon in 1821, the son of a retired army officer. The family led a gypsy existence around Europe, where Richard early demonstrated his talent for languages; he would eventually learn more than 20, with about an equal number

In 1842 — after being expelled from Oxford, which he had de-tested, for attending a forbidden horse race - Burton joined the Bombay Native Infantry and went to northwestern India. Here thrust through his jaw. After the his linguistic ability, particularly Crimean War, in which he helped

His superior, Sir Charles James Napier, sent him, disguised as a Moslem, to investigate homosexual brothels. As a result of his report, a good many dens of iniquity were closed, but to some Victorian minds the very existence of the report was sufficient to blight his military career.

The culmination of a longtime fascination with Arab tongues and lands was his pilgrimage to Mecca and the Prophet Mohammed's burial place, Medina, in 1853. Following this voyage and the visit to Harar, both resulting in books that brought him popular fame, Burton organized his first expedition to seek the source of the Nile. It ended disastrously, with an attack by Somali natives that left one explorer dead and Burton scarred for life by a javelin came the discoveries of Lake Tanganyika and Lake Victoria and the long dispute with Speke. This ended with the latter's death in 1864 — officially by accident, while hunting. Burton, guilt-stricken, always believed his rival had killed himself.

In the intervening period Bur-ton had visited the United States and written about Salt Lake City: married Isabel Arundell, daughter of an old Catholic family, whom he had courted for years; and served as British consul in Fernando Po, a Spanish-heid island off West Africa. He continned in the Foreign Service for the rest of his life; in Brazil, which he disliked; in Damascus, back in his beloved Middle East; and finally in Trieste, a sort of borderland between East and West. He died in 1890, after 18 years of service in Trieste and the production there of an amazing number and varicty of books and translations. Isabel Burton, burner of manuscripts and journals, carefully preserved his library and sent it back to England from Trieste.

It includes more than 100 copies, some in several editions, books by Burton, many of them heavily annotated for future editions; more than 200 works of grammar and linguistics; and almost 1,000 works on countries and regions of Africa, Asia, the Americas, Europe, the Pacific (including Speke's books on the dis-covery of Lake Victoria, bearing in the margins frequent com-ments such as "rot" and "a lie"). Sotheby's is handling the sale, but by private treaty; that is, not at auction. Roy Davids, head of Sotheby's books and manuscripts department, said the library had been offered to, among others, the British Library and the Explorers Club in New York. No particular

Raleigh, said of Burton, "Few people have the range of interests to comprehend this person." Isabel Burton, a devout Catholic, and her husband are interred at the churchyard of St. Mary Magdalen in the appropriately named Mortlake, an undistin-guished southwest London suburb whose only possible tourist attraction is undoubtedly the Burton tomb, a lifesize Arab tent carved in stone. The tomb, 18 feet (5.5 meters) high, was restored almost 10 years ago, but already shows many signs of neglect. In the restoration, a panel of glass was let into the back roof, with a ladder leading to it. Through it one can see a dusty collection of worse than mediocre religious paintings, a crucifix with the crossbar fallen off, a broken lamp or urn and other miscellany, and two coffins.

Hers is simple, his encrusted with the remains of orante gild-ing. Hers bears no decoration. His is topped with a crucilia, no doubt at the wish of Isabel, who had her rather less than devout husband "converted" to Catholicism on his deathbed some hours after he in fact had died. But it also bears a more appropriate ornament, possibly a relic of the original tomb trappings dropped carelessly on the coffin in the course of the 1976 renovation: a string of camel bells.
